

The use of flue gas analysers in the domestic sector

By CORGI Technical Services Officer Martin Guscott

Introduction

Manufacturers design and produce more sophisticated appliances for the domestic heating market every year. This advancement has led to appliances being made from better materials, which in turn means they are made to close tolerances, and as well as becoming smaller in size they are more efficient than ever.